One important way that I engage with students through our course and outside of the classroom is by maintaining an active Facebook page just for students, which I populate with news stories, extra credit opportunities, news around campus, and photos of our learning. Whenever there is a particularly grim news week or I know students are stressing about finals, I make sure I send out upbeat messages or even humorous memes. It's also a repository for regulatory and policy updates or climate change, environmental disaster, or science news. It is also one more forum in which I can share important Mason resources and mental health outreach as well, and the site serves as a reminder that I am tangible and reachable outside of the classroom.

Many therapy dogs on campus in the quad. I'm pretty much going to pet dogs all afternoon now. 😊
